

Carbon Farming - 9th November

Join FarmED and The Carbon Farm for a two day course exploring the economic and ecological benefits of carbon farming.

Would you like to reduce your demand on artificial inputs, increase your margins and sequester carbon in your soil?

In this course, led by The Carbon Farm's Glyn Mitchell, you'll learn how different farming practices influence the carbon cycle, for good or for worse, and what you can do to turn your farm into a carbon sink. We'll take a look at beneficial practices that help sequester carbon and explore the different value of carbon credits, how to measure and monitor soil carbon, and ultimately what it takes for you to transition your farm to a Carbon Farm.

Topics covered:

- On Farm Carbon Cycles and how systems influence a carbon positive/negative farm
- On farm carbon sinks
- Practises and processes of farming carbon
- Different values of carbon credits
- Managing, monitoring, and measuring carbon as carbon credits
- Next steps to becoming a Carbon Farm.

Ticket price includes refreshments and a nutritious and seasonal lunch at FarmED.

About the facilitator - Glyn Mitchell of The Carbon Farm

Glyn Mitchell is a Soil Food Web qualified microbiologist, composter, and soil steward. Glyn supports all growing systems to make soils naturally healthy and fertile and has extensive experience in supporting farmers deliver profitable/nutrient-dense produce. Glyn is author of The Soil Carbon Code, which is designed to reward holistic farmers who manage to increase levels of soil organic carbon by adopting effective soil regeneration strategies. Glyn has presented at Groundswell and regularly lectures on holistic farming and soil regeneration practices across the UK.

The Carbon Farm is a proud partner of 4 per 1000 and the Sustainable Soil Alliance.

The FarmED Bursary

If funding is a barrier to you, we can help. We have a bursary pot which we can use to help fund or part fund course fees and other expenses for those that will benefit most.
